1. North and South meadows gently incline towards luminescent steles bearing the names of all those lost in 1993 and 2001 in New York, Washington DC and Shanksville.

2. Luminescent meadows are sheathed in intelligent glazing. The glazed meadows crown subterranean light reservoirs, whose remains are restored and where family members find consolation. Reservoirs of light illuminate bedrock caverns and the dark of night.

3. Between radiant meadows, a scarred landscape heals, binding wounds from sorrowful days. The Sphere stands witness.

4. Beacons encircle the site, marking the broader memorial to what will forever be beyond this site.
